A Message from Fr. Mike: "Year in Review"

Friends,

Happy Father's Day!

So blessed to be a spiritual father - God bless all our dads! Fathers, grandfathers, godfathers, stepfathers, father figures!

"The greatest gift my father ever gave me is that he believed in me." Jimmy Valvano

It's always important to reflect; look back on the past, especially this past year on what we are doing new. Msgr. McAteer gave me a great foundation to work with & I'm deeply grateful for that.

I wanted to share some things we have done in year 1:

Starting a Pastoral Council & re-starting the Finance Council that meets quarterly (getting new people involved ***)
Monthly Holey Donut Social after Sunday Mass, new 4pm Mass
Monthly Holy Hours for all ages & young adult meeting afterwards
New Social Media presence for parishioners & non-parishioners
Developing a new logo & website for the church (phase 2)
Pre-Cana team being rebuilt & starting in the fall
Blood Drive & Bingo are back; big push for 40 Hours
Developing a new Home & School model; successful H & S events & fundraisers bringing the church & school together, CYO Mass
Bringing the rectory, church, & school staff together as one
Raising the money needed for air conditioning in the school

Next week, I'll share what the hopes are for year 2!

Holy Spirit, guide us!

Fr. Mike

American's abortion debate has nondebatable parameters

Letitia James, New York's attorney general, recently told a rally supporting Roe v. Wade that when she got her abortion, "I walked proudly into Planned Parenthood." How did we descend to the point where an abortion is, for some, what? An achievement? A statement? Somehow an occasion for pride?

Douglas Murray, associate editor of the Spectator, recently explained "What America Gets Right About the Abortion Debate." Many Europeans, although most of them live under much more restrictive abortion laws than all Americans do, consider the mere fact of the U.S. debate to be evidence of America's backwardness — tardiness in getting on "the right side of history." Murray thinks: "The fact that America still regards abortion as a serious moral issue seems to me to be a demonstration that America is still a serious moral country. It recognises that here is one of the great moral issues: the question of life, and the encouragement or otherwise of its cessation. It is not settled on the matter, nor does it imagine there is a clear direction of moral travel directed by the passage of time."

The admirable American debate occurs within some non-debatable parameters, beginning with this: Human life begins at conception, a conclusion not of abstruse philosophy or theology but of elementary biology.

This is why technological development has done much to stabilize the politics of abortion by enlarging and solidifying the ambivalent majority in the middle. Vastly improved sonograms present vivid pictures of small persons in utero, with beating hearts, and sucking their thumbs. Persons who, in the formulation of one antiabortion activist, can hear their mothers' heartbeats.

Americans who believe in a "right to life" are right that, absent a mishap or an abortion, the life that begins at conception becomes, in utero, recognizably a person. But when?

The abortion debate that the Supreme Court's calendar has ignited is compelling Americans to consider what abortion policy ought to be but first to recognize what the United States' policy is: an extreme outlier. In 39 of the 42 European nations that permit elective abortions, the basic limit is at 15 weeks of pregnancy or earlier. In 32 of the 39, the limit is at 12 weeks or earlier. Worldwide, fewer than a dozen countries allow abortions after 20 weeks of pregnancy on any grounds.

In 1975, two years after Roe was decided, Archibald Cox, Harvard law professor and former U.S. solicitor general under President John F. Kennedy, said in a lecture at Oxford University: "The [Roe v. Wade] opinion fails even to consider what I would suppose to be the most important compelling interest of the State in prohibiting abortion: the interest in maintaining that respect for the paramount sanctity of human life which has always been at the centre of Western civilization." That interest, although perhaps unintelligible to the likes of James, is important to the broad American majority.

This majority might soon have the dignified task of instructing their elected representatives to codify, state by state, community standards about the onset of personhood.
